

It's a group work by 6 aimed for an urban renewal project of Mermoz Sud in Lyon. Here's the area of research. It's a district located at the south entry of the city with a relatively young population, and full of long collective residences. The objective is to recreate a sustainable and dynamic district.

The concept is to improve the life quality and to generate social activities among the residences. So we concentrate a lot on the green space. What identified our project is a green axe totally for pedestrian passing through the district, and shared gardens that could bring the people to the ground and let them meet. On the square, the existing swimming pool is to be rehabilitated, becoming a sports center of a wider scale.

Here's a view from the Avenue Jean Mermoz, the main street beside the area. We expect a lively entry with plants on the roof and frescoes that could attract people to find the green space inside.

We cut the roof with steps to weaken the vertical stress but densify the residences at the same time .
